U.S. Was Warned About Attack 3 Days Before Beirut Explosion

By Philip Taubman

WASHINGTON — Three days before a bomb explosion killed soldiers and sailors in Beirut, intellicence agencies warned that U.S. forces in Lebanon would probably be the target of a terrorist attack, according to Reagan administra-tion officials.

The intelligence report specified that the group apparently plenning an attack was a militant pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group in Leba-non known as the Islamic Amai and the Party of God, the officials.

In a related development, Lane Bonner, a spokesman for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said a team of explosives experts from the bureau had been sent to Beirut to belp determine who was responsible for the attack.

U.S. and French intelligence offi-cials said the group appeared to have been involved.

General Kelley did not see or know of the Oct. 20 intelligence report, according to a marine spokesman, Colooel James L. Shiite Leader Demands U.S. Marines Pull Out Of South Beirut Garrison

By Robert H. Reid The Associated Press

GENEVA - Lebanese leaders headed Wednesday for a showdown over the troop withdrawal pact with Israel while a Shiite Mos-lem leader demanded that U.S. marines leave the garrison in the southern suburbs of Beirut.

Nahih Berri, leader of the Shiite Amal militia and a delegate to the national reconciliation conference in Geneva, said the marines should redeploy to West Beirut or elsewhere because of a "climate of racism" after the Oct. 23 bomhing of the U.S. garrison at Beirut airport.

Mr. Berri said that the American public blamed the Shiites for the attacks, which killed almost 300 U.S. and French troops, and that the hostility generated could trigger violence between U.S. troops and Shiites in the airport neighbor-

A conference spokesman, in a briefing for reporters, gave no indication that the Syrian-backed group of Lebanese opposition leaders, the Front for National Salvation, had softened its demand to scrap the U.S.-mediated agreement for withdrawal of Israeli invasion forces in return for security and other concessions.

The one-hour afternoon session was delayed for more than an hour after Spleiman Fransieh, a former president, stormed out of the Intercontinental Hotel after refusing to submit to a security search.

In Washington, the House of Representatives rejected, 274-153, an attempt to cut off funding for U.S. troops in Lebanon, a move that would have ordered the marine force home in four months and defied President Ronald Reagan's Middle East policy.

The Geneva conference agreed Wednesday on a resolution on the country's "Arab character," but Walid Jumblat, the Druze leader, left the talks after a dispute over the withdrawal pact with Israel.

Mr. Jumbiat said the resolution reaffirmed Lebanon's obligations as a member of the Arab League. He did not spell out those obligations, but Arab League members are forbidden by the organization's regulations from entering into unilateral contacts with Israel.

In May, Lebanon negotiated a pact with Israel under which the Israelis would withdraw their troops from the country if Syrian and Palestinian forces also left. Syria and Mr. Jumblat want Lebaion to scrap the agreement.

The Central News Agency in Beirut said the delegates agreed to delay discussion of the troop withdrawal agreement until the last item of the conference.

Before the morning session. Swiss police and guard dogs searched rooms in the hotel occupied by Druze delegates after receiving a homh threat. Druze sources and Western witnesses said no bomb was found.

U.S. Envoy Going to Central America

WASHINGTON (WP) — Richard B. Stone, President Ronald Reagan's special envoy to Central America, will visit the area later this week for further discussions with officials of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica about a regional peace proposal, the White House

In discussing Mr. Stone's trip, the White House spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said Tuesday that Mr. Reagan believed the peace plan being worked on by the so-called Contadora group of Mexico, Venezuela, Panama and Colombia "provides the best basis for a lasting solution to the problems of the region."

That plan calls for barring foreign military advisers from Central America and prohibiting outside support for insurgencies there. The administration increasingly has taken the position that resolution of tensions between the United States and the leftist Sandinist regime in Nicaragua is not merely a bilateral matter but should be addressed within a regional framework such as that offered by the Contadora plan.

Alfonsin Choosing Argentine Cabinet

BUENOS AIRES (Renters) — President-elect Raul Alfonsin was choosing his cabinet and drawing up a series of emergency economic measures with advisers at a ranch outside the capital Wednesday, according to sources in his Radical Civic Union. He was expected to mounce his new cabinet early next week, the sources said.

Argentina's ruling military junta met all day Tuesday to consider the results of Sanday's election, military sources said. The armed forces were stunned that the Radicals won 52 percent of the vote, against 40 percent for the Peronists, who had dominated Argentina politics for nearly 40 years, the sources said.

The junta was believed to have discussed advancing the country's return to civilism government from the scheduled transition on Jan. 30.

Mr. Alfonsin has called for his government to take over in early December so it can start tackling Argentina's economic crisis.

Israelis Close Bethlehem University

BETHLEHEM (AP) - The Israeli Anny on Wednesday closed the Catholic Bethlehem University and imposed curfews on several West Bank towns and refugee camps after skirmishes between troops and Palestinian students. . .

Curfews were imposed as a preventive measure in Palestinian refugee camps and some other Arab towns to forestall demonstrations on the anniversary of the Balfour Declaration of 1917. The declaration was made by the British foreign secretary, Lord Balfour, and paved the way for the creation of Israel by declaring Britain's support for a Jewish

The Israeli military command said the university, which has 1,200 students, would be closed for two months because of the clashes Monday.

Lawyer Meets With Zimbabwe Bishop HARARE, Zimbabwe (Reuters) — Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the former prime minister arrested Monday in an investigation of subversion, has been allowed to see a lawyer, according to Edward Mazaiwana, secretary-general of the bishop's party, the United African National Council. A member of the bishop's family who declined to be identified said he was being held at the high-security Goromonzi jail, 30 kilometers (18.5 miles) east of Harare. Prime Minister Robert Mugabe has accused Bishop Muzorewa of seeking help from Israel and South Africa to overthrow his

Vatican Radio Alleges Albania Killings

VATICAN CITY (Reuters) - A Roman Catholic prelate in Albania was beaten to death in a concentration camp and clergymen who baptized infants were executed. Vatican Radio said Wednesday.

Pope John Paul has called for prayers by Catholic communities across the world this month "for religious liberty in Albania," which some Vatican officials say carries out the harshest anti-church repression.

In a report on religious persecution in the Balkan country, the semiofficial radio said the apostolic administrator of Scutari, the Rev. Ernest Coba, had been beaten to death in a concentration camp about three years ago. A diocesan priest, the Rev. Stephen Kurti, was executed in 1972 for baptizing an infant, while the Rev. U.S. Sale of High Technology to China Is Delayed as Beijing Balks at Terms

FAA, in Report on Republic Airlines, Finds Sloppy Discipline Among Pilots

By Douglas B. Feaver

Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — A special Federal Aviation Administration investigative team, formed in June after two in-flight emergencies on Republic Airlines, discovered a pattern among Republic crews of sloppy discipline, poor coordinaance" with fuel planning procedures, according to the team's

By all accounts, Republic acted quickly to correct those major safety problems, but the findings underline the broader question of why day-to-day FAA surveillance did

There has been growing concern among some aviation experts that Reagan administration cuts in FAA inspector ranks are a threat to the industry's safety record.

The concern is heightened by the fact that new airlines are being started up and old ones are being buffeted by financial turbulence in the competitive shakeout after deregulation of the industry. In April, a Republic flight from Minneapolis to Phoenix, Arizona, carrying 145 persons, lost power in both engines and descended peniously close to mountain peaks before the crew restarted the engines and landed in Las Vegas. The fuel feed had not been switched from one tank to another, something that should have been done before the first tank ran dry.

In May, a Republic jetliner from Fresno, California, to Phoenix With 86 persons aboard lost one engine and almost ran out of fuel before the crew made an emergency landing at a U.S. Air Force base.

The fuel planning incidents that caused the inquiry "were not isolat-ed events," the FAA found, according to a report obtained by The Washington Post under the Free-Investigation and interviews der "continuing special surveil-lance," Mr. MacArthur said he was "very definitely" satisfied that Re-public now has a safe operation. Republic is a child of deregulation, approved by Congress in 1978. The law made mergers easy, and Republic was created July 1, 1979, when Southern Airlines was merged into North Central. In October 1980. Republic purchased Hughes Airwest. Thus, in less than a year, three small regional airlines with different crew training histories, different management philosophies and different flight procedures were joined to become the nation's minth largest airline.

Republic is now a coast-to-coast operation serving 150 cities and making about 2,800 takeoffs and landings a day.

"We had a very good safety record and our general procedure had been to treat pilots as professionals and expect them to perform well, and they did," said Mr. May, who came from North Central.

The FAA came to the same conclusion. "The overriding observation within the operations area," its report said, "was the failure of the check-airman program to ensure that the highest professional stan-dards are adhered to."

Check arraca are surine exo-ployees delegated by the FAA to. certify that pilots and co-pilots are: properly trained and retrained. Much of FAA's safety regulation in the operation of airlines and manufacture of planes, is by delo gation to company employees.

FAA inspectors watch over airthe agency was authorized to have 640 sinine inspectors; in the 1983 fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, the authorized number was 534, and the actual number employed in those jobs was 451.

The report about Republic's opcration is an unusually strong dec-ument for FAA writers. Its descriptions of problems include the following:

 The majority of crews drew current ambassador to Belgium, an imaginary line down the center Charles H. Price. • The majority of crews drew from memory and in some cases. "checklist steps were read but, in fact, not accomplished."

· Six crews encountered weather problems with FAA inspectors on board. "When asked the criteria for using anti-ice, only one crew replied correctly.

The inspectors found that conserving fuel - a major cost factor in airline operations - had become of great concern to flight crews. FAA inspectors said that, on most flights they observed, the Republic crews used a fuel-saving technique in approaching airports instead of the "stabilized ap-proach" that safety experts recom-

"I think my style has been one of being a bit laid-back," said Mr. Louis, 58, in a British Broadcasting Corp. interview. "And I think that's the kind of style a U.S. ambassador here has more or less always tried to portray. We don't push ourselves forward in the society and try to do our serious negotiations and serious relations with your government on a low profile."

His scheduled Nov. 7 departure has been called his resignation by the Reagan administration. Louis has made it clear that he is leaving against his will, however. He said last mouth that he was-"disappointed" at the prospect of leaving Britain.

Mr. Louis's role on substantive matters has been limited, and he was criticized on both sides of the Atlantic for failing to return from a vacation until 10 days after the start of the Falkland Islands crisis. He is to be succeeded by the

Rush of New Uses of Plastics Dims Future of Glass, Metal

For consumers, the first rumbles of the revolution can already be heard. A plastic automotive engine has been built, giving better fuel efficiency, and on the horizon are lightweight plastic batteries, fuel cells and paper-thin arrays of solar cells that can be pulled off a roll. Even the simple toothnaste tube is no longer so simple. Once made of lead, it is now composed of nine layers of plastics and other materials that, among other handy qualities, refuse to break open and ooze toothpaste even after repeated folding. Further signs of the revolution are snack bags and cooking pouches that are impossible to puncture except with a sharp knife or scissors.

Keylar, five times stronger than steel, is widely used to make bulletproof vests. The toughest metal-like plastic yet created was recently announced by scientists at EL du Poot de Nemours & Co. Known as Delrin ST. for super tough, it will, according to Du Pont officials, find its way into everthing from automotive bearings and bicycle gears to typewriter parts and ski bindings.

Perhaps the epitome of super-toughness is the plastic automotive engine. Matty Holtzberg, a New Jersey inventor who is president of Polimotor Research, said his pat-ented plastic engine, built under plastics. Udel, the brand name of a contract to Ford Motor Co. will be

A bevy of new techniques is shaping the new plastics into useful products. Perhaps the most remarkable is a process known as "barrier coextrusion," in which different polymers, each with a unique quality, are bound together into a single sheet that performs multiple tasks such as blocking the passage of light, oxygen and flavor. An example is a potato chip bag, seemingly impervious to puncture. Its inner and outer layers block light. moisture and large chemicals, while a middle layer blocks the migration of molecules such as oxygen. The final two layers tie the whole thing together. High tensile strength is a byproduct of the five-layer sand-

A pioneer of coextrusion, the American Can Co. of Greenwich, Connecticut, says these products weigh less, work better and are cheaper than metal-foil counterparts. At first limited to films (such as the ones curled into toothpaste tubes), coextrusion has recently for its tomato ketchup.

Coextrusion is also extending the shelf life of perishables. Containers of Capri Sun, for example, a widely distributed brand of fruit drink in a flexible plastic and metal package are first sterilized by a blast of bot steam, then filled with fruit drink at a temperature of 195 degrees. After sealing, they have a shelf life of more than a year.

Steel-like plastic is easy to make - but expensive. Greater demand will drive down the price, a trend clearly at work in the automotive industry, especially in fuel-conscious Europe. The amount of plastic in the typical European car has riseo to almost 7 percent by weight, some models having as much as 10 percent plastic.

A problem in all this is recycling. With cars, for example, about 70 percent of their weight (mostly metal) can be recycled - but not plastic parts, a problem currently under attack by chemists. "We're molding bumpers, gas tanks, and roofs," said Nicholas Pappas, Du Pont's vice president for polymer producis. "Actual producis are a couple years down the road, but one of the things we're going to bring to the party is the ability to recycle the plastic."

seem strangely ambivalent about the Grenada trip. They feel simultaneously good and un-easy, finally discerning the administration's misstatements and misperceptions but nonetheless inclined to find value in the enterprise.

Some people still cling to the yarn that an invasion was needed to rescue a few hundred medical students, even as it turns out they were more frightened by the invasion than by anything they experienced before. The national ambivalence begins right there. Sitting in his smashed-up office, Dr. Geoffrey Bourne, the school's vice chancellor, said, "From the point of view of saving our students the invasion was unnecessary — though in political terms it was a very good thing."

How so? When President Reagan launched the invasion, he cited the "urgent request" of nearby islanders who leared that Grenada's "leftist thugs" would begin terrorizing the neighborhood. But whatever their alarm, their request was plainly encouraged, if not indeed written, in Washington.

Restoring democracy in Grenada sounds like a better mission still. But then why only in Grenada? Why not also in Haiti, or Chile? So what was eating Washington? As the president finally conceded, it was all those Cubans in Grenada, building a suspect airfield, perhaps to "export terror." But where was the evidence to support that justification? In fact, there was more ignorance than evidence. Our troops carried tourist maps of the island; they were pathetically underinformed. A week has passed and most Americans to us, exposing a deep-down sense of American inadequacy and weakness. Would not the "loss" of even tiny Grenada make the Commies look stronger and again expose democrats as feeble and timid? Would it not prove that a few radicals can snatch a society from under Uncle Sam's nose, and with Cuba's help put themselves beyond his reach? Would not the world conclude that they are the wave of the future? For once, let's show 'em.

> After all is said and done, the real inspiration and justification for the Grenada invasion lies in those false feelings of impotence fanned by years of deceptive politicking about American retreats, defeats and even nuclear inferiority. And the inevitable corollary of impotence is envy: envy of the Russians' presumed advantage in operating freely across frontiers, exploiting the openness of democracy without a Congress or press or public to restrain them. It may be too late to invade Cuba, or Nicaragua, but Grenada will reverse the tide: two can play at this game.

> The President Feelgood who prescribes such beady pills can momentarily get away with all kinds of diagnoses. It has not yet sunk in that the Grenada high will wear off and leave the world essentially unchanged. Indeed, the world will be unimpressed with such a fly-swat "victory" - if not, worse, disillusioned about the maturity with which Americans manage their enormous power.

> As Soviet history shows, the worst thing about a nacional inferiority complex is that it induces conduct that really is inferior. Delusioo, deception, secrecy and lawlessness are not the American game - not just because Americans preach a superior code but because they actually live by it. Sooner or later we will tell ourselves and the world the truth about Grenada. Having made a pathetic little war because we felt had will not, finally, make us feel better.

Going to Bed Hungry

Heritage Foundation, bungry people in America have only themselves to blame. Food aid programs do not work, says the author, James Bovard, because many families "fail to budget properly." He suggests that, rather than food stamps, "vitamin pills and soup kitchens" might be more suitable lorms of aid.

Of course, having 34 million poor people line up every day for rations might prove to be something of a logistical problem. At the very least, the queues would impede downtown traffic. The long lines might also send the average commuter home with the uncomfortable feeling that all is not well in the land of plenty. Nor will a return to subsistence farming — Mr. Bovard blames agricultural mechanization, induced by the minimum wage, for much of the poverty problem — commend itself to many as a desirable course for U.S. economic and social development.

Still, it is worth inquiring whether, despite federal food programs, some Americans go to bed bungry. One piece of evidence is that lines at soup kitchens and other emergency food centers are long and growing. Many studies, including one by the General Accounting Office, attest to that fact. But, the Agriculture Department responds, the people waiting patiently for food handouts are oot necessarily "in need." They might just be passing the time.

Representative Loon Panetta's nutrition subcommittee recently heard testimony relevant to this point. A survey conducted last summer in New York state found that most people showing up at emergency centers, health clinics and government offices are con-suming far fewer calories than recommended by the National Academy of Sciences. Note that we are not talking about vitamins, proteins and minerals - just basic energy-producing calories.

The medical students who conducted this scientifically designed survey also found that, contrary to Mr. Bovard's surmise, emergency food program clients are not frintering away their cash on inessentials. Those sampled reported spending almost 70 percent of their money on food. The problem is that many people simply do not have enough money to supplement food stamps, as the law assumes they will, let alone cover other hasie needs.

President Reagan wrote in a recent memo that "if even one American child is forced to go to bed hungry at night . . . that is a national tragedy." Well, nearly 20 percent of the parents surveyed said they sometimes send their children to bed hungry. The president might keep that in mind when he reviews the new plans for food stamp cuts that his Agriculture Department is oow preparing.

Grenada's Democratic Future

The events leading to the foreign intervention are still out entirely clear, but it is certain that Sir Paul Scoon, the representative of the British Crown, played a central part in mobilizing outside help against the Grenadian coup leader, General Hudson Austin, in response to alarms by governments of several East Caribbean states. The samest decision Prime Minister Thatcher can take is to leave the matter of free and fair elections - and the quescon of a peace force to police Grenada until then - to the Commonwealth Secretariat.

A Draft and War After '84?

President Reagan will try to reinstitute the draft in early 1985. By then the U.S. military will simply need more bodies than it has to implement new policies mandated by the Reagan administration's view of the world.

After November 1984, Mr. Reagan, re-elected or retiring, will try to orchestrate 2 new military buildup. That buildup will include a because paying an all-volunteer army would be too expensive, even if enough men were willing to volunteer.

If that buildup is successful and Washingtoo's war fever can be sustained and transmit ted to the rest of the country, it is hard to imagine that we will not be in a war if there is a second Reagan administration. This time, probably, the war will be with a country that can fight back - facing Cubans and local nationals somewhere in Latin America, or being drawn into the Israel-Syria war that may have become inevitable when the Israelis invaded Lebanon.

Andropov's Punishing Pace

President Andropov has recently canceled several public engagements because of ill health. The punishing pace he set himself when he succeeded Mr. Brezhnev has not slowed. and whether be surveys the past 12 months or looks to the future he can have little reason for satisfaction. If it is to continue with its arms buildup, the Soviet Union must improve its economic performance. To succeed in extricating the Soviet Union from its growing difficuls. [Mr. Andropov] needs time and energy. but be seems to be running short of both.

1908: A Balzacian Line of Defense PARIS — There is a quaint old bouse and mossy old garden in the Rue Raynouard which is to become a new literary shrine. The Society of the Home of Balzac has recently opened as a museum the house where Balzac lived from 1842 to 1848. No. 47 Rue Raynouard is associated with Balzac's most tempestuous and em-bittered period, and it is related that the house was chosen by the novelist with particular regard for its adaptability to his necessities not so much because the rent was low as because it was perfectly situated and con-structed for defense against the army of creditors who pursued him in those days. It was at No. 66 Rue Raynouard, the French say, that Benjamin Franklin made his first experiments with the lightning rod.

Change Under Andropov: The Earmarks of a Purge

By Leopold Unger

ing away with much of the governpersonnel he inherited from Leonid

Despite his own fragile health, Mr. Andropov has managed to remove what Western observers estimate to be 10 percent of the mid-level officials of the Communist Party and the Soviet state. At the same time, nearly 100 top-level officials in Moscow have lost their jobs. Mr. Brezhnev, during his 18 years in power, gave the Nomenklatura a. ng of security in their jobs, almost a sense of hereditary privilege. But under Mr. Andropov there is a climate of uncertainty. He has tripled the rate of "retirements." Government ministers have been dismissed or demoted, while regional party committees — panels just below the level of the Central Committee have been criticized openly for "ideological insufficiency."

Mr. Andropov took up Mr. Brezh-nev's mantle vowing reforms but no purges. Now, much evidence points to the opposite. True, some reforms have been or will be undertaken. The most important of these has been scheduled for Jan. I and will involve five ministers. It is expected to improve government inanagement and worker productivity.

This is reminiscent of reform pro-posals announced in 1965 and 1979. Now, as then, the risk is great of seeing the reform effectively sabotaged by the nation's bureaucracy, which remains bulky, conservative and largely corrupt.

This may explain Mr. Andropov's approach. With the aid of the KGB—the only institution in which he has full confidence, since his own appointees hold the organization's key posts - Mr. Andropov has launched a purge before approaching his campaign of reforms.

Logically, the purge began with the all-powerful Central Committee and with the Interior Ministry, which controls the police. .

Two of his first decisions are particularly significant. The first was to reduce the power of Konstantin Chemenko, his old rival and long a close friend of Mr. Brezhnev. Mr. Chemenko, who had been considered the regime's No. 2 man, has been "released" from his responsibilities as head of the General Department of the Central Committee.

The other major move was to name General Vitaly Fedorchok, who suc-ceeded him as KGB director, to benister of the interior.

Myths That Distort the First World's View of Third World Debt

S AO PAULO — The foreign debt crisis of the developing countries is the Vietnam of the international financial system. Both the debt crisis and the Vietnam War arose from the same basic error: a belief that it is possible to change the course of developing countries history with a bule help from developed friends - even if this change of course is not exactly what the people in those countries want. Since the early 1950s, the develoned world has believed in a set of myths that supposedly can belp regenerate countries. First is faith in miraculous economic indexes. Brazil, Argentina and India learned fast to produce tons of statistics every year some with rosy figures, others with somber forecasts - to fit any need. In the 1970s, encouraged by the performance of Brazil's a erage growth rate, 10 percent a year, the banking community gave it several loans.

Since the growth of a gross national product is a kind of bible to believers of the pan-financial religion, it would have been in poor taste to remind the lending banks that at that very time São Paulo, a megalopolis thriving on the blessed GNP, was plagued by a meningitis epidemic. Why shed doobts on the optimistic tigures, and why shed light on darker curves - like the infant-mortality rate, which, at that time, reached record beights - if it was widely believed that children could be saved from death by a miracle of the GNP? A second myth is that analogies between countries work. Consider the theory of the economic takeoff in developing countries. It holds that if you have a sound capital accumulation, plus solid GNP growth, takeoff inevitably will occur. It sounds nice but does not always work that way. Brazil accumulated capital, boasted an impressive GNP, but, instead of the economy taking off, the country developed a $90-billion foreign debt. The banking community believed in another myth - that an enlightened native elite might solve most problems. According to that fantasy, all would be simpler in developing countries if, instead of political dispules and elections, there were more governments with a team of the best and toughest in command, acting freely to bring about progress.

ates - and committed basically to GNP growth — failed. It collapsed for the same reason that the Vietnam venture did: the association (through sophisticated disguises) with dicta-torial regimes. Strong regimes, it was believed, were a good remedy for the indolent people of the Third World. In the end, the dictatorships harmed not only the countries themselves but also the bankers who gave them loans. Instead of producing economic stability, they created social instability and a global foreign debt of $500

Mr. Pfaff's leftist tremulousness over what he claims is the "politicization" of the "wireless file, sent out from Washington to U.S. embassies and missions around the world," neither surprises nor distresses me.

Mr. Pfaff feels dispeptic to discover that we occupy a permanent place in the dispatches of the wireless file. If he were closer in touch with reality in Washington, he would discover that this newspaper has become, in its 18 months of existence, a formidable force in the affairs of the nation's capital because of its excellence and refreshingly conservative viewpoint. Mr. Pfaff describes us as "the new newspaper sponsored by the Unifica-tion Church of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon." The newspaper is, in fact, funded by businesses which are, in turn, associated with that church, Churches and their agencies in this country are shielded against government intrusion of all sorts by the First Amendment. Businesses are not, including the businesses which support this very secular newspaper.

Furthermore, this newspaper operates with a greater degree of independence and autonomy from its owners than does any corporately owned newspaper we are familiar with in this or any other country - and that includes France. Thus, to snarl, as Mr. Pfalf does, about "the support of the Moonies cult," is not only gratuitous, but it is an egregious error.

. Utility stocks are a barometer for the entire market because they combine expectations for the credit market with those for the stock market. In the credit market they are looked upon as bond substitutes because they are a conservative investment with relatively stable earnings. Also, their yields are subject to government regulations, and they are basically a monopoly, lacking the risk associated with competition.

Investors Showing Interest

The yields they offer tend to be compared with bond market rates in tovestment decision-making. With interest rates having climbed for several years, utilities had to raise their yields. This pulled down the price of the stocks to lackinster levels. However, with expectations of declin interest rates, utility stock yields are regaining investor interest, according

Now utility stocks are moving to a 10-year high, as indicated by the Dow Jones utility average, and they firmed in the last three months while the general stock market was weak. The rise in the utility average would seem to indicate that interest rates could be going lower and that inflation will not be picking up very fast, analysts said.

 One follower of ntility stocks is John D. Rooney Jr., an analyst with Moseley, Hallgarten, Estabrook & Weeden Inc. In his autumn 1983 undate, Mr. Rooney says that utilities came out of the long bear market, which began in 1965, in 1981 and the recovery followed. Now, he adds, "we expect the progress to continue but at a slower rate, with a great deal

Mr. Rooney says that utility stock price movements "will be governed by inflation, long-term interest rates, the magnitude of construction programs, and the ability to earn the equity returns permitted by regulators." His scenario calls for "inflation to be in the 4-percent to 6percent range in 1984-86, and on that basis we look for some further decline in long-term interest rates over the next three years."

Cash Generation Increased:

He adds that "conservation of energy in the late 1970s has decreased the demand for electricity and reduced the need for plant construction; this factor; compled with the higher returns on equity earned by the industry, has greatly increased internal cash generation." Therefore, he believes that there is less need for outside imancing.

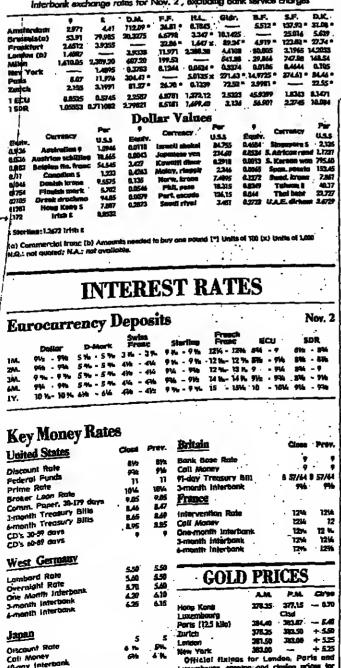

But Mr. Rooney cautions that "the biggest problem in the electrical power industry is the construction of nuclear power plants." He says that, while "nuclear power has proven to be efficient and economical," the cost of building the plants "has escalated enormously." He adds that, while some of the problems such as inflation and interest rates that contributed to the cost overruns are more manageable, the remaining problems of environmental opposition and new safety regulations "are still resulting

Mr. Silverstein of L.F. Rothschild believes that there is a second tier of mility stocks, with yields of about 10 percent, that are poised to move up.

BONN - West German banks, in an unusual rescue operation, on Wednesday bailed out Schröder. Münchmeyer. Hengst & Co., or SMH, a leading private bank that has been shaken by losses at nonbanking companies it partly owns.

The trouble at SMH, one of Germany's most prestigious private banks and e leading international stockbroker, caused share prices, particularly of banks, to tumble on he Frankfurt exchange, and sparked widespread speculation over the source of the trouble.

West Germany's bank supervisors, in a statement, said a group of SMH's creditor banks agreed at a meeting Tuesday at the Bundesbank in Frankfurt to convert out-standing loans to SMH into liable capital shares in the bank, after SMH officials told the group that losses among non-banking compa-nies it partly owns could have "possible negative consequences" for its oanking operations.

Brazilian Austerity Hurts Multinationals

By Peter T. Kilborn New York Times Service

SAO PAULO - The president of Ford Brazil, Robert M. Gerrity was recently summoned back to Detroit to explain, once again, the harmful effect of the troubled Brazilian economy on his newly renovated plant here.

The factory last summer began making Ford Escorts for the Latin American and European markets. "It is $4 an hour here," Mr. Gerrity said of the wages paid to his 12,000 production workers. "It's $12 to Japan, $18 in Europe and $24 in the United States."

He added: "The plant you're looking at right there will beat the cost of running any plant anywhere in the world."

Yet, Ford Brazil is just one of many American businesses here feeling the pmch of Brazil's economic measures. American concerns invest more in Brazil than anywhere else in Latin America, but most new investment has stopped Ford, which with its Phileo subsidiary is the largest American manufacturer in the country, concedes that it is losing money here this year. So are many of the other American multinational companies that account for close to 20 percent of the sales of the country's 500 biggest manufacturers. The continuing world recession bere is partly responsible. But the main problem for industry, especially foreign-owned industry, is the strain of operating in a country struggling to repay foreign debt estimated at around $90 billion. The government of President João Baptista Figueiredo, under ressure from the International Monetary Fund and western banks.

has resorted to harsh economic restraints to tame an inflation rate which broke through 150 percent earlier this year and is now said to exceed 200 percent. BONN - Efforts to merge West Germany's two leading steelmaking groups have definitively failed, the Economics Ministry said

The failure signals the collapse of a major effort to redesign the nation's steel industry to scale down its production capacity to meet the declining demand for crude steel and steel products.

In a statement, the ministry said the steel companies, Thyssen and Krupp Stahl, the steelmaking arm of Fried. Krupp G.m.b.H. informed the ministry that talks to merge their steelmaking operations had broken down, after Thyssen refused a government offer of $188.6 million to ease the merger as ny's steel industry be drastically reorganized into two giant units. The basic idea was that larger units would enable the companies to streamline their operations by eliminating older, less efficient mills, and reduce unit costs by saving on bulk purchases of such raw materials as coal and ores. The proposal was also in line with European Community efforts to cut back European steelmaking capacity because of heavy losses. In the first nine months of this year, Germany's crude steel production totaled 26.5 million metric tons, or 7.8 percent less than a year earlier. The industry estimates it will have losses of about $1.13 bil-

bon this year, or about $40 on every ton of steel it produces. Though the ministry assigned no blame for the breakdown, analysts said Thyssen seemed to fear too great a risk in joining forces with

In just two years, they say, the company has created an entirely new line of compatible desktop computers - each able to transfer information freely with the other -that IBM officials think will propel the company to annual sales of $100 billion by 1990.

The PCjr — or "Peanut," as it has long been known — was announced on Tuesday. It brings into that can prepare data for further analysis on the rest of the compa-ny's more powerful line of office machines.

Analysis say the success of the whole new line of home and personal computers is far more important to IBM than their meager cootribution to the company's revenues would indicate. While sales of IBM's Personal Computer will amount to about $1 billion this year, the machine represents the cutting edge of an IBM effort to get

THE KINGDOM BY THE SEA: A Journey Around Great Britain

By Paul Theroux. 353 pp. $16.95. Houghton Mifflin, 1 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

46 THERE is an English dream of a warm summer evening on a branch-line train," writes the novelist and travel writer Pani Theroux in one of the many evocative passages in "The Kingdom by the Sea: A Journey Around Great Britain.

"Just that sentence." Theroux continues, can make an English person over 40 fall silent with the memory of what has now become a golden fantasy of an idealized England: the comfortable dusty coaches rolling through the low woods; the sun gilding the green leaves and striking through the carriage windows; the breeze ticking the hot flowers in the fields; birdsong and the thimp of the powerful locomotive; the pleasant creak of the wood paneling on the coach; the mingled smells of fresh grass and coal smoke; and the expectation of being met by someone very dear on the platform of a country station."

As a matter of fact, there are a lot of English dreams — dreams dreamt about England as well as dreams dreamt by the English. One of the many interesting points that Theroux makes during his journey concerns what makes England so hard to describe: "Much of it had been written about by great men, and the very mention of a place in a literary work tended to distort the place, for literature had the capacity to turn the plainest comer of England into a

So one of the challenges that confronted Theroux in writing about Britain was to penetrate the English dream and find the reality. Another was more practical - how to find a systematic route, for in "choosing a route, one was choosing a subject." And then a marvelous solution presented itself. He would travel around the entire coast clockwise, setting out from London to Margate; then proceeding south and west along the English Channel to Comwall; then going north through Wales and Lancashire into Scotland, where he would catch the boat train to Ulster and more or less circle the borders of Northern Ireland (this was cheating a little, because there wasn't exactly a seacoast); then returning to Scotland and going north to Cape Wrath, east to Thurso, southeast to Aberdeen and then down the east coast of Scotland and England to complete his journey at Southend.

The route was orderly. It would show him every aspect of Britain. And it was not just a gimmick, for, as he writes, "a country tended to seep to its coast: it was concentrated there, deposited against its beaches like the tidewrack from the sea. People naturally gravitated to the coast, and they wore fewer clothes there - it was normal on the coast to be seminaked,

Still, it may sound monotonous to read about the three-month trip that Theroux finally made in 1981 by rail, wheel, foot and th After all, a coast is a coast; there's the sea the land and the people doing whatever the along a coast. Yet just as the author found "Every British bulge is different and every has its own mood," a reader is continu surprised by what Theroux turns up along

He copies down unusual graffiti; "W ought to be hit about the head with the utr severity," he read at St. Ives Station. thumbnails every sort of unusual character encountered, from the female tramp in Liv pool who asked him to pull her heavy cart fo bit, to a young man named Fuggle who to him that he'd once dyed his hair purple "aubergine, actually" — to draw attention the fact that "deep down . . . I'm just not lil other blokes."

He records all manner of amusing and re vealing dialogues he overheard: Vitchett (on I train): "If you could change any feature of your body, what would you change?" Irby: "Me fice." Vitchett: "Your 'ole fice?" Irby: "Yeah. Me 'ole fice." (One of Theroux's many clever devices is early on to announce his talent at guessing approximately what people's names are. So, for the remainder of the book, you never know whether the ones he uses are real or "guessed.")

The book is filled with history, insights, landscape, epiphanies, meditations, celebrations and laments. Along the coast of Dorset, Theroux keeps wondering at the mumber of old people sitting in their cars and staring out to sea. He then recalls a passage written by Elias Canetti on the symbolism of the sea, and decides that to the English the sea "was not only a comfort, representing vigor and comonly a comfort, representing vigor and com-fort. It was an end, too. Those people were looking in the direction of death." Reflecting on how badly managed and rundown were all the large hotels at which he stayed, he con-cludes that "the English were not naturally corporate people." They "do small things well and big things badly." That, in part, accounted for the country's decline.

This is the depressing aspect of reading "The Kingdom by the Sea." Almost everywhere Theroux went along the coast, he saw poverty, unemployment, retrenchment. The great branch railway system — the machine that had been set down in the garden and left it undefiled — was shutting down. You could no longer "get there from here." England was reverting to its pre-industrial condition and the people seemed to lack the energy or will to do anything about it.

Reading "The Kingdom by the Sea" has many compensations, both practical and inspi-rational. Therony's evocation of northern Scotland is breathtaking. Following his entire route with a good atlas — the book's endpaper maps are unsatisfactory — is an ideal way to get much of Great Britain's geography straight in one's mind. But a reader isn't left with much desire to follow the anthor's route. On the whole, one prefers to go on dreaming the English dream.

The 'Papa Bear' Progenitor of Pro Football

NEW YORK - He was 82 then, still at Chicago Bears. George Halas was talking in 1977 about Walter Payton, the most recent of the famous running backs in the Bears' history — which was also their owner's history.

Payton had rushed the previous Sunday for 275 yards, still the one-game record in the National Fontball League, and now the Bears were awaiting a Thanksgiving Day game in Detroit.

"That's the great thing about pro fourball, something like what Walter did Sun-day you usually enjoy for a whole week," Halas was saying.

"But not this time, damp it. I wish we weren't playing the Lions so quick, so we could savor what Walter did a little long-

Until his death Monday night, Halas savored pro football longer than anybody else. He also suggested it, shaped it and When the league that would develop into the NFL was formed in Canton, Ohio, on Sept. 17, 1920, Halas was there in Ralph Hay's Huomobile showroom at the first meeting of organizers from 12 Midwestern

He was representing the Decatur (Illi-nois) Staleys, who would move to Chicago in 1921 and a year later be baptized as the

"We only had two chairs at that meeting," he often said. "Everybody else sat on the runningboards or the fenders." In the beginning, Halas was a rare triple threat - owner, coach and, as right end on offense and defense, captain.

By the time the Papa Bear stopped coaching at age 73, his record, including playoff games, over four separate 10-year tenures was 326-150-31 (.673) and the Bears had won eight NFL titles. Only the Green Bay Packers, with 11, have won

"We'll murder 'em," Halas said. "Attaway. Good seeing you, Coach."
"Hey, pal, how about a free beer?"
Long after he stopped coaching, Halas remained Coach to everyone who knew m. especially other coaches. "There is only man I embrace when we meet," the late Vince Lombardi once said,

"and only one 1 call Coach." Halas was 68 when he coached the Bears to their last NFL title in 1963, defeating the Giants, 14-10, at Wrigley Field in the championship game. "There isn't room," he said the next day, "for many of these things in one lifetime." Considering his 88 years, George Halas had more room than most people. His Bears also won the championship in 1946, 1943, 1941, 1940, 1933, 1932 and 1921. In 1940 they staged one of the most awesome performances in history by stomping the Washington Redskins, 73-0, for the league title.

The Washington owner, George Preston Marshall, had baited Chicago by ridiculing the Bears as "a bunch of crybabies." At halftime, Halas reminded his players of the taunt, and they added seven touchdowns to their 28-0 margin. To people who complained that he had poured it on, Halas replied:

"We used 33 men and the 33d scored a touchdown. Should I have rushed out and tackled him myself?"

But since the 1963 title, the Bears have aware. When a senator introduced Halas qualified for the NFL playoffs only twice, and Grange "of the Chicago Bears" to

During a contract dispute after the 1966 season, Mike Ditka, an all-pro tight end, described the Papa Bear's payroll philoso-

But when the Bears needed a new coach after the 1981 season, Halas hired Ditka. obviously offering him a salary with enough "manhole covers."

Dick Butkus, an all-pro middle linebacker, also fended with Halas, filing a $1.6 million suit in 1974 against the Bears for "irreparable damage" to his knees because of improper medical attention. Butkus eventually agreed to a settlement for a reported $600,000, alienating Halas even

But when Butkus was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1979, he chose Halas 10 he his presentor at his induction. The Papa Bear accepted, although illness kept him in Chicago.

Halas virtually created a private wing for the Bears at the Canton shrine. Of its 119 members, 19 in addition to Halas himself were established Bear players, more than any other team — Doug Atkins, George Blanda, Dick Butkus, George Connor, Paddy Driscoll, Danny Fortmann, Bill George, Red Grange, Ed Healy, Bill Hewitt, Sid Luckman, Link Lyman, George McAfee, George Musso, Bronko Nagurski, Gale Sayers, Joe Styda-har, George Trafton and Buildog Turner.

"Nagurski," the Papa Bear once said of the fullback of the 30s, "What a man!" Another of his favorites was Luckman, the quarterback who guided the rout of the Redskins in the 1940 championship game, thereby affirming the T-formation in the

"Luckman could do it all," the Papa Bear once declared. "Pass, run, kick, defend — and think."

Grange, the all-America halfback from Illinois, joined the Bears in 1925 for a lateseason barnstorming tour that attracted nearly 400,000 people to 18 games, and to the concept of pro fontball as well,

"Nothing else mattered."

CHICAGO — The National Hockey League Players Association will join Chicago Black Hawk center Tom Lysiak in applying for a federal court injunction to block the 20-game suspension he received after tripping a game official, Lysiak's lawyer said Tuesday night.
Attorney Billy Martin said the suit was to be filed Wednesday or Thursday. "The National Hockey League Players Association has decided to join the suit and challenge cided to join the suit and challenge suspension became automatic when Lysiak was cited for a Category 1 violation of Rule 67-A in Newell's game report to the league. NHL referees acquired the power to suspend players following committee meeting - comprising players, owners, referees and gener al managers — during the league's 1982 annual meetings. The rule breaks down into Category 1, dealing with physical abuse of officials and calling for a 20-game suspension; and Category 2, which covers such things as verbal abuse and provides for a three game suspension. Alan Eagleson, president of the

NHLPA, said the union is distressed that there is no appeal of the penalty and questioned wheth-er Lysiak's action properly falls under Category 1's guidelines.

The Last Shakers

By Milly McLean United Press Intern

ANTERBURY, New Hampshire - The quiet lilting voice rises slightly as Eldress Bertha Lindsay, one of only eight remaining Shakers, takes exception to the suggestion her religion is dying.

"The religion is not going to die out, not the spirit of it anyway," she says firmly, her chin lifting a little.

Eldress Bertha and the trust that operates the 600-acre (240-hectare) Shaker Village are trying to make sure that won't happen. The Shakers, a celibate Christian sect founded by breaksway Quakers in England in the 18th century, got their name from their shaking, shouting, dancing rituals. They stopped taking new members in 1957. Declining interest and a shortage of male leaders to train new converts prompted the decision.

Only eight official members remain: three women in Canterbury and five at Sabbathday

Lake in Maine, Even though membership has dwindled the Shaker trust has launched a $400,000 fund-raising campaign to maintain the New Hampshire village, which became a museum in 1969. The money will renovate nine of the 22 buildings, according to the trust's director,

Richard Kathmann Fund raisers hope to convert a dairy building into a Shaker food restaurant, the syrup house into an exhibition of traditional food processing and the carriage house into a visi-

The simple, white clapboard buildings, with their peeling paint and crumbling foun-dations, may be a curiosity to tourists. But to Eldress Bertha, who has lived and worked in every one of them during her 86 years, they are a legacy of the austere, work-oriented life on encouraged.

"I want it to represent exactly as we lived

— just as if we had left the room for a little while and were going back," she said. Eldress Bertha is blind now, but recalls details from 1938 as if they were yesterday. She remembers workshops where members made the simple slat-backed chairs, flat brooms and wooden boxes for which the Shakers became famous.

She recalls the "entertainments" young people staged in the meeting house when it wasn't used for prayer. The kitchen prompts memories of apple pie flavored with rose water, distilled from the flower garden.

She feels the buildings are consecrated because of the hard work the male "brothers" put into building them in the late 1700s and 1800s. "Even the stone walks were cut by hand, not by machinery," she said. Like hundreds of other Shakers, Eldress

Bertha came to the village as an orphan. Her older sister brought her at the age of 8. Since the religion dictates celibacy, new members were either converts or orphans who decided to join at age 21. 'I can always remember my first day here."

said Eldress Bertha, who wears the plain white cap and simple dress of Shaker women. "My sister was leaving. I lay out in the middle of the road there and cried. Sister Gelina came along and she said, 'Don't cry, little girl. I'll be your sister.' There was such love, I felt I should return that in love for other little girls."

Eldress Bertha agrees the furniture and crafts developed by the Shakers will probably be the longest-lasting legacy.

The Shakers tried to do everything perfectly," she said. "They tried to put their religion into their work."

Maine Shakers have continued to take in new members. But the two eldresses in Canterbury, the religion's leaders, have refused to acknowledge them. Eldress Bertha said their church covenant stipulates that they must live

Shaker Eldress Bertha Lindsay

by the decisions of their elders, although she has regrets. "I would have loved to have seen this home full of people," she said.

Interest has also increased in the village. Every year, about 20,000 people from the United States and around the world visit the backwoods of Canterbury to meet the eldresses and tour the grounds, according to the fund-raising director, Ellie Porter.
